SPRINGFIELD, Mass. (AP) A medical examiner on the William S. Martin Jr. University of Pennsylvania death row has found a painful syndrome in a man who was executed by hanging in an attempt to stem the flow of the death penalty.

The case is the first in a series of death row cases that have resulted in cutbacks in the death penalty on death row in Pennsylvania. The death penalty was abolished in the late 1970s.

The death penalty was reinstated in the early 1990s. Since then, the death penalty has been suspended and the death penalty was abolished on a case-by-case basis.

The final rule of the death penalty is that the death penalty should be abolished, as long as the death penalty does not cause or result in a medical emergency.

The death penalty was abolished in the late 1970s, under that provision, following a two-week delay in the execution of the man, K. — K. J. Martins, 28.
